RESPECT IS SHOWN TO FARR'S MEMORY

Great Gathering at Funeral of FARMERS' INSTITUTE Beloved Pioneer and Churchman.

MANY PROMINENT MEN DELIVER ADDRESSES

Among the Number Is Fred J. Kiesel, Close Friend of Dead Man.

OGDEN, Jan. 17 .- Lorin Farr is at rest. All that is mortal of the distinguished and aged pioneer, churchman and statesman was laid to rest at the City cemetery this afternoon, following one of the most impressive and largely attended funeral services ever held in Ogden City.

At the Ogden tabernacle, where the MUCH-WANTED COUPLE obsequies were held, every pew was filled long before the hour of the services began, and a number equaling three times that which witnessed the last rites in the edifice failed to obtain even standing room, so crowded was the building even standing room, so crowded was the building.

The programme began promptly at 2 o'clock in the afternoon and was rendered in the same order as previously announced, with the exception of an address by Ben E. Rich, who was indisposed. His place on the programme was filled by Mrs. Lucy Young Gates, who read a poem composed by herself dealing with the pleasant associations recalled by the death of Mr. Farr, when, with him, she attended the dedication of a monument to Prophet Joseph Smith at Sharon, Vt., three years ago.

The speakers, with one accord, paid high tribute in an unbroken chain of sulogy to the man who had been the close friend and co-worker of Prophet Joseph Smith, and who, from those earlier days, had been continuously in the service of the Mormon church.

President Joseph F. Smith spoke at length on his earlier associations with Mr. Far and paid glowing tribute to length on his earlier associations with Mr. Farr and paid glowing tribute to his church work. "No better example of an earnest, God-fearing man could be found than Lorin Farr," he declared. "The spirit which until lately rested in this form of clav now before us was a royal one, royal because he was a son of God and was authorized directly by God to do his bidding. There are sons of this good man now living who are nearly as old as I, and to them and to his daughters, grandsons and grandaughters, and to his grandchildren, I could give no better advice than to ask them to emulate his noble example."

Closing, President Smith quoted from one of the hymas popular in the Mor-

Fred J. Kiesel, one of the speakers, spoke feelingly of his earlier association with Mr. Farr, declaring that they had worked together for many years for the upbuilding of the state and this city. Though not a believer of the same creed, Mr. Kiesel said that he always addressed the dead man as "Brother?" Farr, as he always held a hypotherity feeling for him.

The other speakers were: President C. F. Middleton, who delivered the in-vocation: Joseph Parry, President L. W. Shurtliff, Patriarch David McKay, Moses Thatcher and Apostle George A. Smith. Bishop C. W. Nibley delivered the benediction, and Apostle John Henry Smith the dedicatory prayer at

The floral tributes were the most claborate ever seen at a funeral in the city. A huge bouquet of Easter lilies from his grand-children, a large floral basket from the Ogden city officials, a heart design of carnations and roses from the Relief society of the Ogden stake, and a large wroath from Mr. and Mrs. M. NEWS OF MANTI

Special to The Tribune.

MANTI, Jan. 17.—In the case of the state of Utah vs. Webster Green on the charge of adultery, which is still on trial here, two witnesses—Sheriff Kandsen and former County Attorney Larsen—were placed on the stand Friday for the prosecution. They testified to having gone to Mount Pleasant and entered the railway station, where Greene was. The sheriff had said to Greene: "We have come to arrest you." Greene's answer was, "On what?" To which the sheriff replied, "On the Madge Morrey affair." A paper purporting to be the affidavit of Madge Morrey in which she accused Greene of being the father of her child, was handed to Greene. After looking this paper over, Greene said: "I didn't think Madge would do that." Larsen says, "You're up against it."

In the conversation which followed Greene said that he didn't believe he was the father of her child, but admitted criminal intimacy with her.

Considerable talk followed about the possibility of having the charge reduced so that it could be met with a fine. Greene also stated that he would never go to the penitentiary, and inquired if his bondsmen would be held liable in case he should be found dead some morning.

Documentary evidence, including the posed to have been sent Madge Morrey in Los Angeles, Cal., was next admitted as evidence. This concluded the state's case. No witnesses were placed on the stand by the defense, not even Greene himself

INTERESTING SERMON BY THE REV. MR. ELDERKIN

Special to The Tribune.

OGDEN, Jan. 17.—Rev. Nobie Strong Elderkin, paster of the Congregational church, delivered the second of his series of sermons addressed to the state legislature tonight, in which he asked for a repeal of certain laws which are being openly violated in Ogden city.

He dealt with gambling and prostitution, cylls of this city, with ungloved hands, and deplored their existence here in violation of the law, which, he declared, is a dead letter, so far as Ogden is concerned. He referred to Belle London, the queen of Ogden's underworld, in a sarcastic vein as "the leading influential and the most powerful citizen of Ogden." He begged the citizens of this city to be honest with themselves, and ask the legislature to repeal all antigambling and anti-prostitution laws unless there is a determination to enforce them.

To show the power of the gambling element, he said that Mayor Brewer had told him last week that he has had no hope for re-election since he began the enforcement of the law prohibiting the opening of saloons on Sunday.

MURRAY IS WORKING HARD FOR PROHIBITION |

Special to The Tribune.

MURRAY, Jan. 17.—From indications, Murray is by all means in favor of prohibition. All last week the bishops in the various wards were buslly engaged working in the interests of the cessation of the liquor traffic at this place. This week a man from each ward will be chosen to make a house-to-house canvass, to enable all the citizens in Murray who are in favor of prohibition to sign the petition. Good headway was made last week, but it is expected that by the end of this week all, or a good majority, of the citizens will have attached their signatures to the petition.

A great many of the citizens of Murray are strongly in favor of prohibition and today the liquor subject was touched upon in the various churches at this place. Nothing has been suggested as yet with regard to the increasing of the liquor licenses in this section.

teresting situations. There is tranquility at first, then interest that binds, and even intense excitement in two or three places, but throughout it all there is much sheer delight and humor. Mr. Mack and Miss Blanche Douglas have found few pieces better suited to their powers than "Prince Karl." The German bulls on the English language and sparkles of wit of Mr. Mack, as Prince Karl, are thick. The scene is laid in Germany. The piece deals with the troubles of Karl Prince von Armeheln, a German nobleman left penniless by prodigal ancestors. While trying to evade creditors, he meets and falls in love with an American helress, a widow, Mrs. Florence Lowell—assumed by Miss Douglas—whose motherin-law falls desperately in love with the prince, and to evad her Karl feigns insanity, and then suicide, to escape from the lunatic asylum. Then he returns and, disguised as the princes foster brother, hires to Mrs. Lowell as courier, in which capacity the last of the von Armeheins becomes a flunkey. The Lowell party decides to go to Tyrol, which places the disguised courier in danger of being recognized by old friends, and to prevent this he develops a bad cold, and Mrs. Lowell simultaneously develops a wonderful affection for her humble courier. As a result, there are several delightful love scenes between them. Directly J. Cool Dragon, a Chicage shyster lawyer, appears with the information that the dead prince is the real helr to the widow's millions, but the supposed dead prince, in disguise as the courier, promptly rectifies this in a will and codicil, purported to have been left by Prince Karl. Then he is arrested for embezziement, at the instance of Dragon and Spartan Spotts, also of Chicago and a schemer, but is recognized by his custodian, the mayor of Breslau, as the prince, which brings the piay to a happy conclusion.

The company is well balanced, but Mr. Mack and Miss Douglas deserve especial menton. Miss Callle Gates, as the mother-in-law, is good, and Miss Bessle Wilks, as sprightly Alicia, helps the play alo
